News from Gressenhall Museum

It was with great sadness that we felled one of our beautiful Beech trees last month. We had been trying to save it from a fungus that attacks the roots. We couldn't risk parts of it falling off and hurting anyone.

The Beech trees, which we think were planted around 150 years ago, are very important to the site. It's fascinating to think of all the changes these trees have seen. There are also two young healthy Beech trees on site that were planted back with the help of Gressenhall Playgroup in 2012 for the Queen's Jubilee.
